the rebellion succumbed. He spoke of the extent of our losses, not only by the destruction of our ships, which was comparatively small, but in the destruction of the American carrying trade, the falling off in our exports and imports. With all due allowance for abnormal currency and the diversion of war, all aspects of the treaty were considered easy. Every British pirate, he said, was a bold nuisance, involving the British Government, which should be made to respond in damages, not to the individuals who have suffered alone, but also to the National Government, for the com-
